

THE TABLEAU HR SCORECARD ; MEASURING SUCCESS IN TALENT MANAGEMNT

INTODUCTION :

1.1 Overview :

Human resources (HR) management professionals say that talent management, defined as the process through which organizations meet their needs for talent in strategic jobs is one of the biggest challenges that organizations will face in the 21st century

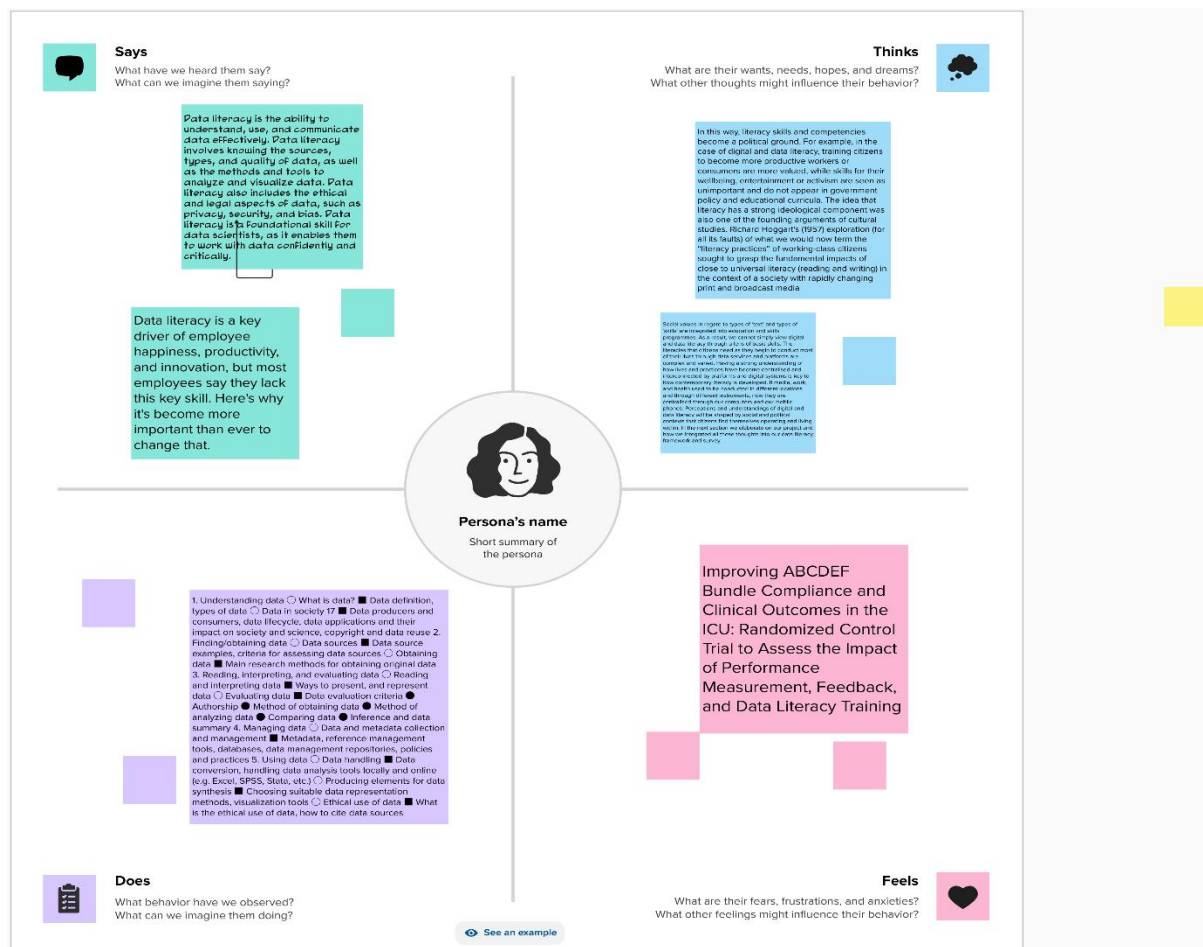

Analyses indicate that talented employees make up from 3 to 5% of all employees within an organization

In view of its current popularity and the relatively large amount of past research one might expect the field to be well defined and supported by a wide range of research and praxis. However, numerous writers and researchers believe that the field currently lacks a clear definition, framework and general objectives (Lewis and a stable theoretical basis 2016) and empirical.

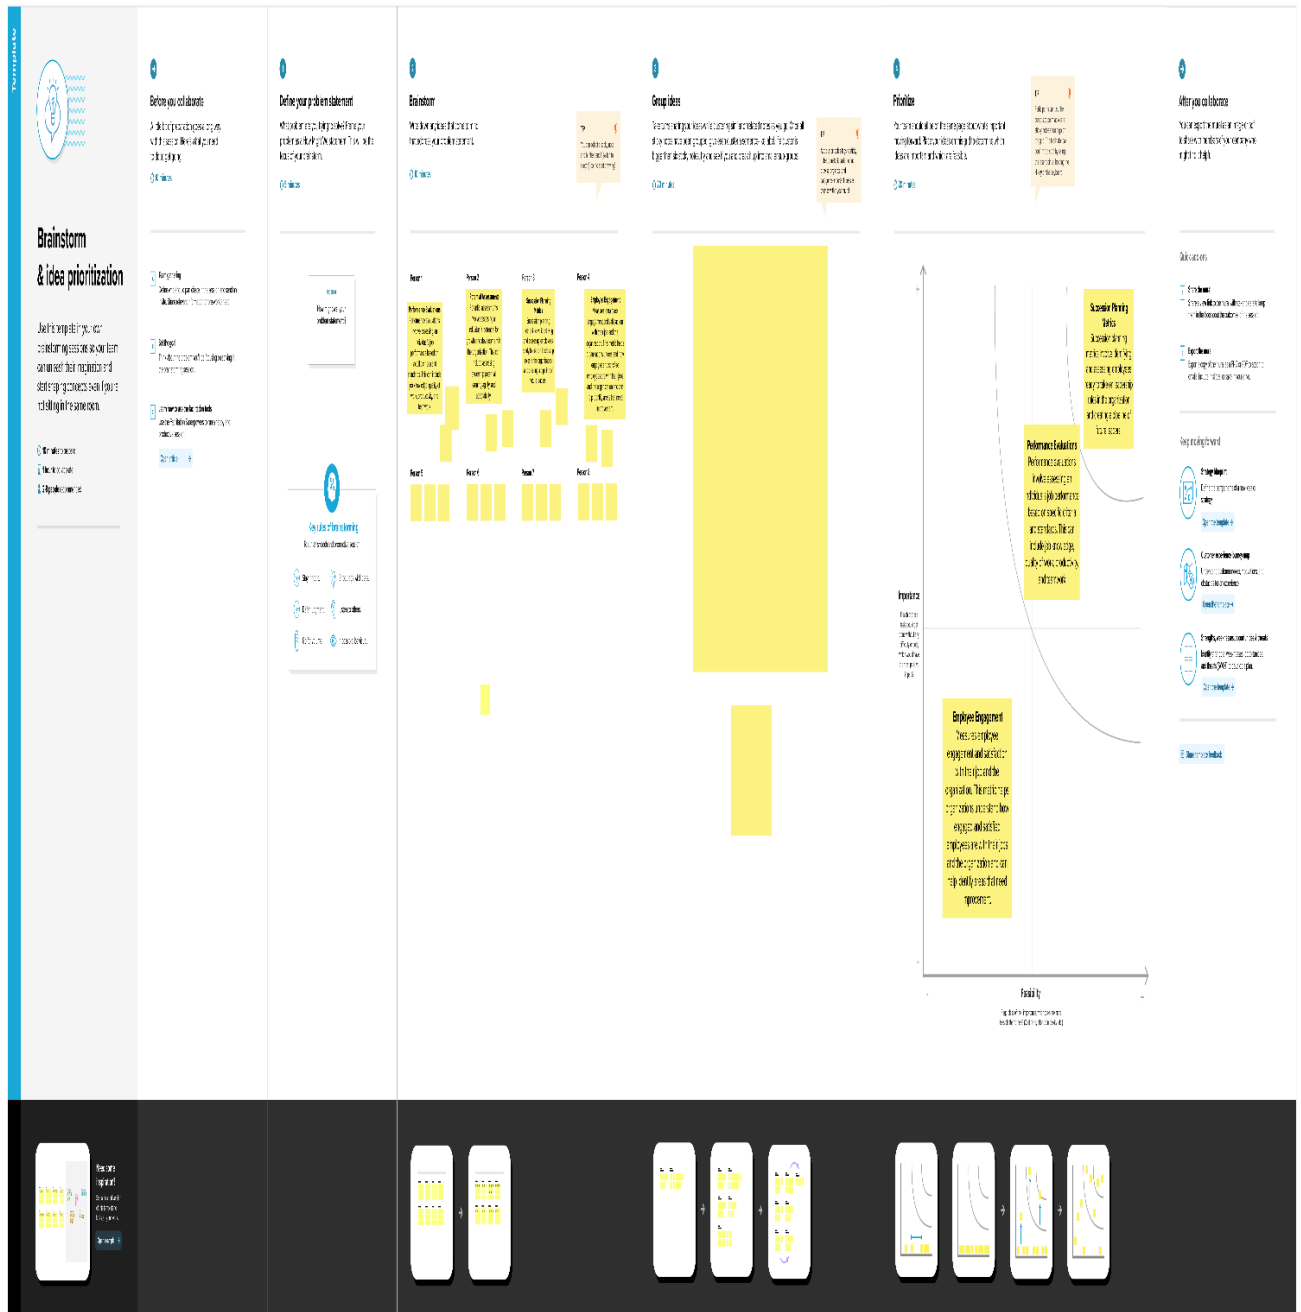

Gallardo-Gallardo and (2016) found that the largest amount of empirical research on talent management is conducted in the United States, Great Britain, Australia, Netherlands and Ireland. This has led to a noticeable Anglo-Saxon influence and a focus on researching the process of talent management in the private sector and in multinationals.

This paper investigates the effects of different types of talent management strategies on organisational performance. We introduce four different strategies and show how they affect organisational performance. For this purpose, we use a particularly detailed dataset of 138 Swiss companies.

CONCLUSION :

The goal of this research was to find out what is the level and importance of financial literacy for the successful management of family firms. Multiple case study method assisted by semistructured questionnaire was employed as the main research tool. We have explored the education of management of family firms and also the way how financial management is organized.

FUTURE SCOPE :

The scope of talent management fall into five major categories: recruitment, performance management, succession planning, training and development and retention. Each of the five components plays a significant role in talent management, but are viewed as a complete set of processes an organization must employ to successfully manage the talent .
